

---

Approved Blueprints

Posted by E60M5 - 2007/08/21 14:38

---

Hi all I'm new here due to the fact that I'm planning on adding an additional room and bathroom to my home. I just had a contractor from a local building company talk to me about the steps and heads up on going through this process. I was told of an $8600 charge to the Los Angeles county building and permit dept. is to be issued once blueprints have been approved. I'm wondering is this correct? I live in a residential community R2 zoning. Adding 1 bedroom extending a current room and adding a full bath to the new addition. I appreciate all input, and if there's any licensed contractors in the LA area please pm me. I am very serious about the addition since my family is growing. Thank You.

=====

Re: Approved Blueprints

Posted by Renovator - 2007/09/04 17:56

---

Dear E60M5;

I'm not from your area, but I was shocked that the permits for your project would cost that much. Permit costs in our area are based on total cost of the project. You did not mention the cost of your project?

I would post another message on costs of permits in your area, I would be interested.

=====